A IDENTIFY MAIN IDEAS What types of activities could tourists do on a farm? Make a list and then read the text to check your answers.

TAKING TOURISM BACK TO ITS ROOTS

These days, it often seems like computers do everything for us. But even with all the progress that technology has made, there is comfort in the traditional ways of life. That's why agritourism is on the rise and should continue to be promoted.

Agritourism refers to activities for tourists that take place on a farm or a ranch. There are two main goals of agritourism: to provide meaningful experiences for tourists and to help the farm industry stay alive. The farming economy has suffered. The cost of farm equipment has increased and younger generations don't want to cope with the difficult life of farming, so there is no one to carry on the work.

However, agritourism, which is a branch of eco-tourism, is now a fast-growing part of the travel and tourism economy, and is helping the farm industry improve.

Perhaps you've taken part in this style of tourism without knowing it. Many experiences count as agritourism, such as touring a ranch or visiting a vineyard. Maybe you've visited a farm and collected fresh eggs, or learned to perform some of the many farming tasks that must be tackled on a daily basis.

Because there is agritourism around the world, many opportunities are available. Tourists can spend the weekend at a farm in the California mountains where they learn how to milk a cow and make cheese, but they can also take tea plantation tours in Taiwan, gather figs at a fig farm in Spain, and enjoy many other experiences where they can be close to nature.

Overall, ranches and farms welcome agritourism.
One American study found that in the state of Virginia alone, agritourism supported more than 20,000 jobs and generated $840 million in income. It has been a big step forward in keeping the farming industry alive.

EXTREME LIVING

1 READING

A Look at the picture. Why do people like to watch survival reality shows? Read the article from an entertainment blog. Does it mention your ideas?

Home Shows About

ONLY THE STRONG SURVIVE—And Get Paid For It

Why do we watch television shows where people are obviously uncomfortable? For about the last ten years, shows based on surviving in extreme environments have become very popular. In fact, there are currently more than 50 survival reality shows on television around the world.

These shows usually follow a basic structure. A group of strangers is dropped off in a remote location with limited, or no, supplies. They have to find food, water, and a safe place to sleep each night. Every week, the people on the show vote to remove one member of the group. The last remaining survivor usually wins money and prizes, sometimes up to $1 million.

Sometimes, there are only two people rather than a large group. They are allowed to select one tool, such as a sharp knife or something to help start a fire. They then have three weeks to walk to a new location, where food, water, and a ride home will be waiting for them. This becomes a lesson in working as a team and being patient under extreme circumstances.

Locations for survival reality shows are usually extreme; for example, the jungles of Micronesia, where the average annual rainfall is 100 to 200 inches (2540–5080 mm). The temperatures often reach over 100°F (38° C). One thing to keep in mind in these tropical climates is insects. People usually wake up with enormous mosquito bites, which add to other physical problems such as hunger and thirst.

Perhaps we watch these programs because we want to see how far people can push themselves, or we want to watch others have adventures that we'll never experience. Maybe we want to see them succeed, or maybe we're hoping they'll fail. Whatever the reason, it looks like people will be watching survival reality shows for a long time!

THE RIGHT JOB FOR ME

1 READING

A Read the job names in the article. Name one thing a person who works each of the jobs might typically do. Then read the article and check your answers.

Get Out of Your Comfort Zone at Work

For some people, a typical work day includes sitting at a desk, taking phone calls, and tapping away at a computer. However, there are plenty of more unusual careers for people who want something a little different. Would you like to interact with poisonous snakes, study emoji icons, or eat ice cream all day and get paid for it? Read about three unique jobs and see if they are right for you.

EMOJI TRANSLATOR

Emojis have become so effective in communicating emotions that international corporations now use them to connect with clients. But just as human body language varies across cultures, so do expressions and gestures communicated by emojis. For example, the thumbs-up sign may be positive in the United States, but it is insulting in Russia. Companies are now hiring emoji translators who report on how emojis can cause problems in different cultures.

ICE CREAM TASTER

John Harrison starts his work day at 7:30 a.m. when his taste buds are at their sharpest. He then samples around 20 ice cream flavors, which he analyzes for taste and smell. It's not as easy as it sounds, though. Harrison's formal job title is "flavorologist." People who would like to have this dream-like career should have experience in food science, product development, and maybe even chemistry. They must have an excellent sense of taste, and they may also be responsible for inventing new ice cream flavors.

SNAKE MILKER

Are you uneasy around snakes? Then this job definitely isn't for you. A snake milker extracts poisonous venom from snakes, which is then used to develop treatments for medical conditions. Someone holding this job must be comfortable caring for snakes, making sure they are not harmed in the process. Snake milkers usually have degrees in animal biology, and they may work in research labs, universities, and zoos.

B IDENTIFY AUDIENCE Read the article again. Then answer the questions.

- 1 Who is the audience for the text?
 - a high school students
 - b people who like their jobs
 - c people looking for a career change

C How do you think most readers would feel about each job?

- 2 ice cream taster
- 3 snake milker

THE ME TEAM

1 READING

A Think of three benefits that playing team sports might have for children. Then read the article and check your ideas.

Sports for Life

Team sports have the potential to play a vital role in a child's life. Of course, there are the health benefits that exercise brings. An active child is overall a happier, healthier child. Another plus is that sports expose children to the value of working on a team. They learn to solve problems better, and they build relationships with others. This aspect of team sports is important later in life, too, when they're ready to enter the workforce.

You might say that the downside of team sports is the possibility of losing. In fact, losing contributes to important life skills, too. Everyone loves to celebrate when their team wins. But imagine if your child's team has practiced and worked hard and is confident they're going to win the next game, but they end up losing. That would be a real disappointment, wouldn't it?

CRITICAL THINKING

or why not?

But that loss demonstrates to your child that a person can work hard at something and still not succeed. Children learn to keep trying and not to give up. They keep hoping for a more successful outcome. After all, losing isn't a weakness; it's an opportunity for improvement. It also teaches children to share their disappointment with their teammates, so they don't have to take on those negative feelings all by themselves.

Parents often worry about the downside of team sports. They argue that sports can take up a lot of time that their child could spend on academics. However, athletes actually do better in school. Because games like soccer, baseball, and football have specific and complicated rules, memorization and repeated practice are required. These are skills that carry over into learning a language, for example when you weigh the pros and cons, it's obvious that team sports are the clear winner.

3 WRITING

A Read the summary. Cross out the sentences that don't belong. Why don't the sentences belong in the summary?

I recently read a book about a young man who grew up in the South of the United States. It was a true story. The author wrote about growing up in poverty and how it was a difficult life for him and his family. It also affected his performance in school. His grades suffered, and he almost dropped out of high school. I am glad his teachers helped him stay in school. He must have had good teachers who cared about him. The author finally graduated from high school and went on to college. While in college, he took a part-time job and was able to buy a car. When he graduated from college, he had excellent grades and he decided to go to law school. I don't know if I could ever finish law school because it sounds very difficult. After law school, he got a job and made enough money to help support his family. He felt very proud of the accomplishments he made in his life, even though it was a hard life at first.

SUMMARIZE MAIN POINTS Write a summary of the article on page 32. Decide if it's more appropriate to use state or say when you report the author's words.

WHAT LANGUAGE BARRIER?

1 READING

A Read the article. Underline the formal and informal connecting expressions. As an article on a blog, should it be more formal?

 $\otimes \square \square$

CULTURAL ETIQUETTE IN THE DIGITAL AGE

When we think of language barriers while traveling, one of the first images that we often think of is a lost traveler, gesturing wildly to a confused local person.

The lost traveler doesn't know the local language, nor does he or she understand that gestures can be culture-based, too. In the last decade or so, another barrier to being understood in a new culture has appeared—cell phone etiquette.

OK, imagine this situation. An American man is on the subway in Japan when his cell phone rings. He answers and has a brief conversation. He keeps his voice low, but he still senses that people are annoyed. Later, he learns that it's actually rude to talk on a cell phone in public places in Japan. There's not much he can do to correct his previous poor behavior, so the next time he rides the subway, he simply switches his phone to silent.

Cell phone use can cause problems in the same way a misunderstood word or gesture can. And in the same way, knowing the correct action depends on which culture you're dealing with.

Trying to catch up on phone calls during lunch? If you're eating, you'll be considered rude if the person on the other end is from the United Kingdom.

Therefore, save your UK calls for after lunch.

With regards to answering calls in public places, it's acceptable in the United States; however, it's rude if you're in the middle of a face-to-face conversation. In China, on the other hand, you may be in for a surprise if your in-person conversation is interrupted when your friend takes a call from another person.

It's easy to create cultural barriers. That said, the best way to avoid them is to educate yourself whenever dealing with cultures different from your own.

GLOSSARY

SPENDING ON OTHERS COULD MAKE A DIFFERENCE IN YOUR LIFE

There's a Chinese saying that goes something like this: "If you want happiness for a day, do something for yourself. If you want happiness for a lifetime, do something for others." Many researchers believe these words of wisdom when it comes to how you spend money, once your basic needs are met, of course.

In related studies, researchers Elizabeth Dunn and Michael Norton noted in their book Happy Money: The Science of Happier Spending (2013) that people who spend their money on others seem to get more satisfaction than those who spend their money on themselves. Spending on those you care about, or even strangers, can boost overall happiness levels. But they do point out that happiness comes from spending money on others because you want to, not from spending it out of guilt or obligation.

In another study, the World Happiness Report (2019) revealed that there is a high level of unhappiness among Americans. It was reported that this could be due to people not spending enough of their money on others. Spending money on charities, or making donations, could make people happier. Just ask someone like Bill Gates. According to many, this billionaire is happy devoting his time and money to others. It's been said that he gets more pleasure in spending most of his billions on charities and scientific research than on personal luxuries.

The good news is you don't have to be wealthy to spend money on others. Buying someone a coffee, making a small contribution to a charity, or giving a few dollars to a homeless person could be worthwhile as it helps us communicate and connect with people. That warm, happy feeling you get every time you spend on others rather than on yourself might make a big difference to your level of happiness and overall well-being.

 - a To tell readers to be calm when they are in traffic.
 - b To advise readers why they shouldn't worry and complain about the small stuff.
 - c To warn readers that feeling stressed can weaken the immune system.

HOW DO YOU DEAL WITH THE LITTLE THINGS IN LIFE?

Are you one of those people who complain and worry about the small stuff? Well, don't. Scientists have recently discovered that people who worry and complain about the little annoyances in life may be putting their health at risk.

While there are some people who get through the small stuff—heavy traffic, miserable weather, or canceled dinner plans—with ease, there are those who react with anger or frustration. When these little challenges or difficulties arise, emotions are bound to rise, too. Our bodies react, but not in a good way.

Recent studies show that negative emotions can flood the bloodstream with stress hormones. These hormones are released into the body when it interprets danger or threat. When they do, it can decrease our energy levels, increase heart rate and blood pressure, and in some instances, slow down digestion and reproduction organs. If that's not enough, stress hormones can make the immune system weak, which can cause other illnesses in the body.

What can we do? Well, practice being calm. Meditate, find deep breathing exercises, or concentrate on happy, positive thoughts when things don't go smoothly. Visualize the road becoming free of traffic or that rainy day bringing sunshine. Calming the mind and imagining things will work out can improve our health, both physically and mentally.

It takes practice to be calm. But we need to train our brain to deal with strong emotions when something annoys or frustrates us. So, the next time something small irritates you, learn from it and take control of your reaction. Know that worrying over the little stuff will not only ruin your day, but will be sure to affect your health, too.

- B Read the article again. What specific examples of why we shouldn't complain about the small stuff does the writer mention? What advice does the writer suggest?

THE SECRET OF CONVERSATION FLOW

What makes conversations so special? Well, they all have something called conversation flow. Conversation flow happens when conversation is comfortable, effortless, and smooth. It's the way conversations are supposed to work. Sometimes, conversation flow seems to happen automatically. You and your conversation partner get along and the conversation feels very friendly and natural. That's great when it happens, but what do you do when the conversation doesn't flow?

That's where the ideas of invitation and inspiration come in. An invitation is when you say something that lets your conversation partner clearly know it's her turn to speak. And when your partner says something to you that makes you want to speak, that's known as inspiration. Invitation and inspiration are the key ingredients of smooth, comfortable conversation. These conversational strategies keep the conversation flowing. Learn how to use them and you will have conversations free of awkward pauses and fake small talk.

Let's say that you and your friend Steve are chatting as

Steve replies, "Oh, it was great. How was yours?"

You reply, "It was fine."

What happened? Well, you didn't give Steve a clear invitation or a strong inspiration. Without either of those things, he didn't know what to say next (and perhaps was unsure if it was his turn to speak). So, he didn't respond. The conversation failed.

Without an invitation or an inspiration, your partner might not know what to say or whether to respond. That's why you want to make sure to offer invitations and inspirations to your partner in order to have a conversation flow.

HOW TO START A CONVERSATION WITH THREE BODY LANGUAGE TIPS

BODY LANGUAGE TIPS

Using body language to help you start a conversation can lead to great conversation. You do not have to say much because just a look or a movement can be beneficial.

The following shows the main points of body language you should be aware of when you want to start a conversation.

FYF IISF

We can learn all about a person through their eyes. Your eyes can say many things and sometimes you may be unaware of what your eyes are saying. Be careful not to let your eyes say you are bored and are not listening.

BODY MOVES:

The way you move your hands, arms, feet, and head can say many things. Crossing your arms, tapping your foot rapidly, or putting your hands on your hips can all say things that might seem negative. Always be aware of what your body is saying.

B

FACIAL EXPRESSIONS:

Smiling can say more than words so be aware of your facial expressions at all times. You may frown and be unaware of it. Facial expressions can often be misunderstood if you give someone a serious look. They may think you do not like them. Just make sure you are using the rest of your body to speak as well, and your facial expressions should come across clearly. Your eyes, body, and face can carry on a whole conversation for you.

A PROFESSIONAL PROFILE

$\otimes \Box \Box$

WRITE A COMPANY PROFILE THAT WINS BUSINESS

An attractive company profile is a great way to get potential customers to buy from you. Here are a few tips that will help you write the perfect profile.

Think about what customers want to know and adjust your content accordingly

Content is often based on what the company thinks their potential clients want to know. Before you prepare your document, you need to understand exactly what your potential clients would want to know about you.

Gather feedback

If you don't have a company profile, talk to the clients you already have, your friends, or your family. Ask them what questions they have about your products or services and try to provide the answers when you create the profile.

Update your current profile

If you already have a company profile, ask a few clients for their honest feedback on it. Think about the questions you are most frequently asked by your customers. These questions point to issues you'll need to address when you update your profile.

Use images

A lot of companies don't use images in their company profile, and this is a missed opportunity. If you're including information on the business owner and staff members, put photos next to their profiles. This helps to build a connection between the company and the client. You may also consider including a photo of your building or office.

Strengthen your brand

A company profile can be used to outline and reinforce what your business is about and establish your identity in the marketplace. Don't forget to use your logo and company colors. This will ensure that your customers will always know who you are. It also makes your profile look more professional.

- B TAKE NOTES Read the article again. Take notes about each of the five points. Then summarize each point with a sentence.

1 READING

A Read the article about diamonds. How are "fake" diamonds different from "real" diamonds? How are they the same?

REAL FAKE DIAMONDS

The diamond in a ring today was formed millions of years ago. Deep inside the earth, under conditions of extreme heat and pressure, carbon was pressed and cooked into the hardest of minerals. Powerful eruptions – bigger than any current volcano could produce – brought them to the surface. The conditions necessary to create diamonds no longer exist naturally, but they can be simulated in a lab. Instead of millions of years, man-made diamonds can be created in about a month.

Chemically, man-made diamonds are exactly the same as natural diamonds: They are 100% carbon, formed by high heat and immense pressure. They look identical, too. Even professional jewelers have a hard time telling them apart. In fact, the only real difference is history. For some people, however, history matters. A natural diamond has flaws that make it imperfect but also unique. Manmade diamonds are "too perfect."

Man-made diamonds have advantages over natural ones, beyond their lower price (usually about 30% less). They are not politically controversial, like the so-called "blood diamonds" of the past. Best of all, man-made diamonds can be made to order. If you want a stone of a particular size and with a slight pink color, you don't have to search the world for it. Just tell the manufacturer when you place your order. In a few weeks, you'll have your own personalized real fake diamond.

- 1 beyond: more than just / related to
- 2 finite: limited / unlimited
- 3 flaw: big difference / error or imperfection
- 4 mineral: a type of stone, like marble or coal / an element, like carbon or oxygen
- 5 pressure: space / force
- 6 simulate: to prove the accuracy of / to copy or recreate

2 CRITICAL THINKING

A THINK CRITICALLY Would you say that man-made diamonds are fake diamonds? Why or why not? Imagine you wanted to buy a piece of diamond jewelry today. Would you choose natural or man-made diamonds? Why? Give at least three reasons to explain your preference.

SUCCESS BEHIND THE SCENES

1 READING

A Do you think working as an actress is fun and exciting? Read the article. Was your prediction correct? What was the day like for the actress?

Life as an actress

By Mariel van White

Yesterday, I had the opportunity to spend the day with an amazingly talented actress, Ashley Stone. And from what I experienced, being an actress not only takes a lot of skill, but determination and patience, too.

As soon as she arrived to work, at 6.00 a.m., she got checked for hair, makeup, and wardrobe. These things need to be perfect when the camera is rolling. After that, she checked in with the assistant director to make sure there hadn't been any changes to her lines. There had—and it seems there are script changes most days—so she had to memorize them before she was called in front of the cameras.

When Ashley got to the set, the director and crew were busy setting up the scene with special lights and checking camera angles. She stood around waiting, and waiting ... and then, when it was time to step in front of the cameras, someone had to adjust her makeup while the wardrobe assistant checked her outfit, again!

After an exceptionally long time, she got to say her lines. But right in the middle of them, the director shouted "Cut!" Something wasn't perfect. It was a missing light. There are little problems like this all the time on a movie set. Ashley just had to go back to her trailer to practice her lines again. When all the actors were called back to the set, the scene was shot before another break, this time for lunch. After lunch, Ashley and the other actors spent the rest of the day shooting scenes and rehearsing for the next day. Finally, but not until 10.00 p.m., someone called it a wraptime for everyone to go home.

Fun? It certainly didn't seem like it. There was a lot of standing around. You need to be extremely focused and patient. That's part of what acting is all about. But Ashley told me it's worth it in the end because when the film is released, millions of people around the world will see her work on the big screen.

- 1 The actress arrived to work.
- 2 The assistant director changed the lines.
- 3 There was a missing light.
